102 RIVER IS BEST OF ALL

DALE CARNAGEY GROWS SOMEWHAT REMINISCENT.

NOW IN SWITZERLAND

Nodaway County Boy Is Writing New Novel—Homer Croy And He Talk Over Old Times.

The One Hundred And Two River, with its overflows and bends, is staunchly defended by Dale Carnagey, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Carnagey, former residents of Nodaway County, in a communication to the Democrat-Forum and Tribune.

The Carnageys, who lived near Harmony moved to Johnson County about twenty years ago. They now live at Belton, Mo.

The novelist is with Homer Croy at Interlaken, Switzerland, and both of them are writing new stories which will be published soon. In his communication to the Democrat-Forum and Tribune Mr. Carnagey says:

"'The Nodaway Democrat,' as I still insist upon calling it, arrives at the unfailing regularity of washday. I read everything in it from the arrest of bootleggers to steak frys, along the 102. The 102! Everytime I read about that muddy little creek, I can hardly restrain myself from engaging passage on the next boat and coming back and cutting a willow pole, and digging grub worms, and going to it. Nothing in the world seems so much fun now as fishing for mud cats did then. And Caviar, and rainbow trout and wild boar's liver— hey are not one, two, three in my estimation, compared with a nice yellow-bellied cat fish that you have hooked yourself out of the 102.

"I am writing this letter from Interlaken, Switzerland. A mountain river, twenty times as broad, and 102 times as swift as the 102, rushes through the center of the town. I have never had enough interest in it even to inquire the name it bears. It does not seem half so important to me as the 102.

"Homer Croy and his family are here also. Every afternoon, Homer and I take a two hour's climb among the Swiss mountains and talk of Nodaway County while we are doing it. We are both hammering away at new novels. We are both returning soon to New York.

"That brings me to the sad part of this letter. After I get in New York, I shall have no time to read your most interesting paper, much as I should like to do so; I shall have to ask you to take my name from your list. If our records show that I owe you something for the extra time it has run, do let me know what it is and I shall send my cheque at once.

"I shall try to send you occasionally little items that I think may be of interest"

Making Progress on Itasca Park Campaign

More than fifty memberships in the Itasca Park Highways Association have been secured in Maryville, according to those in charge of the solicitation here. The quota for this county is one hundred memberships and most of these must be obtained in Maryville.

Work will start within a short time on marking the highway, which is routed from New Orleans to Winnipeg, Canada. The Missouri portion will be marked first and the others as soon as the organizations in the various states completed.

In order to emphasize what this highway will mean, it was pointed out that last year 300,000 tourists passed over the Jefferson highway, and this brought a great deal of revenue to the towns along the route.

Pickering to Vote on $8,000 School Bonds

Election To Be Held On July 21—Would Erect Building and Make Some Needed Repairs.

A special election will be held at Pickering on July 21 to vote bonds to the amount of $8,000 for the purpose of erecting a building for the grade school and making some necessary repairs to the present building.

The special election was called at a meeting of the Pickering board of education held Thursday evening.

The seating capacity of the Pickering school house is inadequate and more room must be provided in order that the school may remain in the list of first class approved schools. The most practical solution, of the problem, it is contended, will be to build a new house for a part of the grade pupils and use the present building for the high school and seventh and eighth grades.

URGES PACTS FOR SECURITY

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE POINTS WAY TO PEACE.

NO ENTANGLEMENTS

Co-operation Is Essential If World Is to Expect Permanent Progress, He Tells His Hearers.

The complete text of President Coolidge's address will be found on page six of this issue.

Swampscott, July 3.—Rolling back the pages of history, President Coolidge today led some two thousand citizens of Massachusetts in commemorating the anniversary of the date upon which the immortal George Washington assumed command of the Continental army.

It was just one hundred and fifty years ago that this epochal event took place on the town commons of Cambridge.

Cambridge, Mass., July 3.—Counseling European nations to enter pacts for their mutual security if they are distrustful of each other, President Coolidge today pledged to such covenants the moral support of the United States government, in the interests of lasting peace.

In a brief passage in speech otherwise devoted to an analysis of the character and achievements of George Washington, whose 150th anniversary of taking command of the Continental Army was the occasion of a celebration here today which the President addressed, Mr. Coolidge permitted himself to make this important declaration of foreign policy, and declared his wish that America take the leadership of nations in placing reliance on the "good faith of mankind."

"If the people of the Old World are mutually distrustful of each other, let them enter into mutual covenants for their mutual security," he said, "and when such covenants have been made let them be solemnly observed, no matter what the sacrifice."

"They have settled the far more difficult problems of reparations, they are in the process of funding their debts to us, why can they not agree on permanent terms of peace and fully reestablish international faith and credit?"

"If there be differences which cannot be adjusted at the moment, if there be conditions which can not be foreseen, let them be resolved in the future by methods of arbitration and by the forms of judicial determination.

No Entanglements.

"While our own country should refrain from making political committments where it does not have political interests, such covenants would always have the moral support of our government, and could not fail to have the commendation of the public opinion of the world.

"Such a course would be sure to endow the participating nations with an abundant material and spiritual reward. On what other basis can there be any encouragement for a disposition to attempt to finance the revival of Europe? This world has tried war with force and has utterly failed. The only hope of success lies in peace with justice.

"No other principle conforms to the teaching of Washington; no other standard is worthy of the spirit of America; no other course makes so much promise for the regeneration of the world."

New Peace Policy.

The President's remarks were regarded as an expansion of his well-developed policy of striving for world peace and in behalf of American entry into the World court. At the same time, his advocacy of European security pacts was distinctly new and expected to provoke reverberations in European chancelleries. By some it was regarded as a blow to the League of Nations.

Some of the President's audience believed he was enunciating a new interpretation of Washington's Farewell Address, which counselled against entanglements with foreign nations, for in connection with his declaration of moral support for security pacts, he intimated his belief that it was a course that Washington would approve.

"Washington demonstrated," said the President, "that more progress can be made by cooperation than by conflict.

Co-Operation Essential.

"The world has not outgrown, it can never outgrow, the absolute necessity for conformity to these eternal principles. I want to see America assume leadership among the nations in the reliance upon the good faith of mankind.

"I do not see how civilization can expect permanent progress on any other theory. If what is saved in the productive peace of today is to be lost in the destructive war of tomorrow, the people of this earth can look forward to nothing but everlasting servitude. There is no justification of hope. This was not the conception which Washington had of life."

In summing up Washington's achievements and paying tribute to his character, the President said: "I think we may regard George Washington as the first lay citizen of the world of all time. He was one in whom the elements were so evenly blended, so accurately proportioned, that his character has well denied analysis. Others have created wider commotion and deeper impression in the hour of their eminence. But we shall hardly find one who in his own day achieved so much as Washington and left his work so firmly established that posterity, generation after generation, can only increase its tributes to his ability, his wisdom, his patriotism, and his rounded perfection in the character of a Christian citizen."

LAMKIN HEADS COMMITTEE

CHAIRMAN OF RESOLUTIONS OF N. E. A., AT INDIANAPOLIS.

NO EVOLUTION PLANK

Mr. Lamkin States No Resolution on Evolution Will Be Submitted to the Meeting.

Uel W. Lamkin, president of the State Teachers College, was selected as chairman of the resolutions committee of the National Education association which has been in session at Indianapolis, Ind. this week. Mr. Lamkin is expected to arrived home tomorrow morning.

According to a dispatch from Indianapolis, the resolutions committee will not submit to the convention any resolution on evolution, stated Mr. Lamkin.

Several resolutions condemning the restriction on the teaching of evolution by legislation had been submitted to the committee, Mr. Lamkin said. The committee thought that the theory of evolution was capable of so many different phases of interpretation that any resolution bearing upon the subject with directness would arouse opposition, whatever its wording, and a vague expression of position would be of no value in establishing a policy.

His Torch Was Power

Cambridge, Mass., July 3.—"Washington, the youth of 22, the commander whose order proved the torch to set a world on fire."

Thus did President Coolidge deseribe America's first president here today in commemorating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Washington's assumption of command of the continental army.

The president was speaking of that day in July, 1754, when the young Washington led a band of Virgianians to the western frontier to protect against French aggressions. The differences failed of amicable settlement a skirmish took place and the French commander was killed.

"So came the seven years' war and the establishment of British domination in North America," said the president. "A little later came the American revolution, the French revolution, and the Napoleonic war."

NEED MORE FOR ROADS

FINAL DRIVE FOR FUNDS TO BE MADE MONDAY.

CAN'T GO FARTHER

Unless Goal is Reached—Expected to Construct 18-foot, 9-inch Gravel Highways to Cemeteries.

A final drive will be made Monday, Jull 6, to bring to a close the popular subscription campaign to raise funds for improving the roads from the highways to the four Maryville cemeteries, according to members of the Maryville Cemetery Road Improvement Association this afternoon.

The committee in charge of the campaign will have solicitors on Monday and all those who have not contributed to the fund are requested by the committee to have their pledges ready when the solicitors call.

The amount contributed to present date is sufficient to improve the roads but not to the extent that the committee has anticipated. Unless subscriptions are received to the amount estimated to construct a first class highway, eighteen feet wide, with nine inches of gravel, nothing will be done this year.

A little help from everyone will insure the speedy completion of this important project, members of the association said today.

SANTA BARBARA AGAIN ROCKED BY VIOLENT EARTH TREMORS

SEVERAL DISTINCT SHOCKS ARE FELT TODAY.

SEVERAL ARE INJURED

Considerable Property Damage Results From New Quakes—Debris Falls From Wrecked Structures

Santa Barbara, Cal., July 3.—A fifth violent earthquake shook the city at 11:20 o'clock this morning. It lasted only about five seconds and was followed immediately by a deafening roar of mortar and bricks crashing to earth from buildings damaged by previous shocks.

Light tremors followed the fifth quake as the earth appeared to settle down after its upheaval.

Nearly everyone has stopped work and persons are gathering about the streets away from the buildings and homes.

Girls in the telephone company's building fled screaming and crying from their switchboards which they had manned bravely during the first three shocks.

The postoffice and city hall buildings were heavily damaged by the new quakes.

Santa Barbara residents reported the most violent shock of today was only about one-fifth as horrible as those which wrecked the city Monday.

Terror was added by the outbreak of four small fires in the residential section. Fire engines whirled through the streets. All of the fires have been reported extinguished.

A shock much less violent than the five earlier in the day was held at 12:20 o'clock.

The persons injured in today's quake were hurt by falling debris from buildings or sustained injuries when they fell down stairways or in the streets as they ran for safety into the open.

Santa Barbara, July 3.—Another quake rocked Santa Barbara at 10:41 o'clock this morning. It was the third consecutive quake of the day.

Santa Barbara, July 3.—The fourth consecutive earthquake of the morning struck Santa Barbara at 10:45 o'clock this morning, coming while already half-wrecked Santa Barbara was recovering from its earthquake disaster of Monday.

A series of violent quakes rocked the entire city today.

Terrific convulsions of the earth at 8:38 o'clock this morning toppled over bricks and cornices from the city's partially-wrecked buildings, driving hundreds of terrorized residents into the streets.

It was followed by another intense shock at 10:21 o'clock and a fourth one at 10:45. The third shock at 10:41 was less violent and did small damage. Ten persons were slightly injured by falling walls and flying debris in the first of the quakes. Many women fainted.

Santa Barbara, Calif., July 3.—At least ten persons were injured and considerable property damage was done by a second earthquake which brought new terror and disaster to stricken Santa Barbara today.

The shock coming at 8:38 o'clock rocked every portion of the city. Whether persons in the residential district and outlying sections have been killed or injured is unknown.

The shock appeared to have centered near the Carillo Hotel, and that structure and a fire station across the street being violently shaken by the shock. The walls rocked forward and backward in huge waves but did not completely fall.

White-faced men and women poured into the streets as the tremors shook the city.

Within a few seconds after the earth movements had stopped, comparative quiet prevailed. Damage to the partially wrecked structures on Santa Barbara's main avenue, State street, was largely confined to falling plaster and huge stones and bricks, first reports indicated.

Among the buildings damaged heavy in today's quakes are the First National Bank and the great Wardrobe building. The beautiful new Santa Barbara postoffice, a stone structure on State street, which escaped damage in the first quake of Monday, was cracked by today's terrific explosion.

In the residential section, damage was reported as slight.

State street was filled with crowds of nervous men and weeping women a few minutes after the quake. They were afraid to re-enter the buildings from which they fled and too frightened to run for safety in other parts of the city.

the city. They stood fast in their tracks.

Santa Barbara, Calif. July 3.—A violent quake rocked the entire city of Santa Barbara at 8:38 o'clock this morning. The extent of the damage is not known. It is not believed any persons were killed or injured.

The new tremor was a violent convulsion of short duration. Hundreds of people fled into the streets, women shrieking with terror.

The debris from buildings wrecked in Monday's quake shattered to the ground. A partially wrecked structure withstood the force of the new tremors and remained standing.

From the position of the International News Service wire, none of the buildings have been greatly damaged.

The walls of the Lincoln High School which had been partially wrecked in Monday's earthquake, were shattered by the new tremors.

A fire station opposite the new Carillo Hotel was shaken down by the new quake.

In the office of the telephone company, located in a temporary structure, twenty-five girls bravely remained at their posts, not a one leaving the shaking switchboards. While heavy timbers crashed in the telephone structure and plastering and bricks fell about them, the girls remained at duty and attempted to flash word of the new quake to the outside world.

Great disorders broke out after the quake. Firemen and policemen rushed from their posts to the badly wrecked area in the business district. Ambulances were dispatched to the quake streets and there they awaited in readiness to care for any who may have been injured.

Telephone lines leading south into Los Angeles were not disconnected. Several telephone girls swooned and were carried into the streets where they were cared for and revived. None of the girls was hurt.

Santa Barbara, Calif., July 3.—Harassed Santa Barbara was aroused today by continued earth shocks. Extremely light tremors were felt all through the night, and a fairly heavy shock rocked the city at 3:50 o'clock this morning.

Thousands rushing into the streets to learn no new damage had been done were drenched by a light rain which followed the shock. Rain was falling steadily shortly afterwards and the streets were soon running with water and mud.

You Are Lucky If Your Birthday Comes Tomorrow

If your birthday falls on the natal day of the nation, you'll find that you are in distinguished company, so far as birthdays are concerned, and also—the stars promise bright things for you! Hugh Fullerton, writing in the Liberty, tells the story of the Fourth of July as a birthday, and what it means to you.

"How closely the orders from the stars have been followed by those born on that day may be judged from examining the lists," Fullerton says. "This year the birthday of the United States and that of its President are on the same day, the first time in American history that the birthday of the Chief Executive falls on that of the anniversary of the country's birth, for Calvin Coolidge was born July 4, 1872.

"Garibaldi, Italy's great hero, and Nathaniel Hawthorne chose the Fourth of July as their birthdays, so did Joseph Benson Foraker, Ohio's famous warrior politician. So, for that matter, was George M. Cohan, who has been the pinwheel of American theatricals, and the man who painted Broadway red, white and blue.

"The stars seem to have set themselves favorably for persons born on the Fourth. They are born under the sign of Cancer and to see the light first on July 4 means success, happiness, and agreeable results in marriage. Those born on the Fourth should be endowed with good health and a strong constitution, and in later life should be marked by singleness of purpose and steadfastness of character.

"If your birthday is the same as that of your country you will be inclined to conservatism, disposed toward taciturnity, even toward obstinacy in purpose. You will have a keen but hidden sense of humor.

"If a woman you will have a great love of humanity and you will be a rebel and a sympathizer with those who suffer from injustice."

Many Big Events in America Chose July 4 to Happen

Considering the fact that the declaration of independence was signed on July 4, it's highly proper to regard that day as an important one in the nation's life.

But for some reason or other, a good many other fairly noteworthy events in American history have fallen on July 4. Here are a few:

1676—Exactly one hundred years before the signing, important reform legislation looking toward the complete liberty that was eventually gained by Washington was completed by the Virginia assembly.

1754—Col. George Washington, an officer in the French and Indian war, met defeat at the hands of a superior force of French at Fort Necessity.

1781—Cornwallis evacuated Williamsburg, Va.—the beginning of the colonists' final victory.

1826—John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, second and third presidents, died within a few hours of each other.

1831—James Monroe, author of the famous doctrine that bears his name, passed away.

1845—Texas voted for annexation to the United States.

1846—California's independence of Mexico declared by Fremont and followers.

1863—The turning point in the Civil War. Vicksburg fell to Grant, while Lee, crushed the day before at Gettysburg, fell back into Virginia. From then on the Confederacy was a lost cause.

Wash Downing, Hopkins, advertises in this issue that he has good sound corn for sale at Hopkins for 70 cents a bushel.

The Maryville Dancing Club will give a grand select ball at Union Hall in this city on next Monday evening, the 5th instance. Extensive preparations have been made and it bids fair to be The ball of the season.

The Maryville Silver Cornet Band has been engaged to furnish the music at the celebration at Atlanthus on the Third of July.

The Baptist Sunday School held a picnic in Tom Wadley's grove, about three miles east of Maryville, on last Thursday. We learn that it was largely attended.

The Presbyterian Church of this city, destroyed by the late storm, is now undergoing repairs. It is expected that it will soon be ready for service.

Harvey Logan, who has been riding over the county quite extensively the last week, reports fall wheat as looking well and promising a full crop. The replant of corn, he says, is up and growing finely.

A. L. Holsapple, who lives in the northwest corner of Holt county, has discovered a sweet sulphur spring on his farm. It is said to have fine medicinal qualities. Mr. Holsapple intends having the waters of this spring analyzed at an early date.

This year the Fourth of July will not be celebrated in Maryville, and many of our citizens will doubtless participate in the celebrations to take place at Conception and Hopkins.

Judge T. J. Johnston, member of the Constitutional Convention, has been home for the past week resting from his labors for a short time. He will soon return to Jefferson City.

We saw the other day in the Nodaway Valley Bank a beautiful specimen of fall wheat, grown on the farm of E. B. Heflin, in Atchison township. Mr. Heflin has thirty-five acres of this wheat, and from the appearance of this sample we would estimate that the yield will be some twenty or thirty bushels per acre. Mr. Heflin is now harvesting this grain.

TWENTY YEARS AGO.

The Modern Woodmen deserve congratulations on the large crowds that came to Maryville the 4th. We had splendid addresses by Mr. Tillotson of Illinois and Judge Boyd of St. Joseph. There were good entertainments provided.

One of the Fourth of July speakers at Skidmore was D. J. Howell, son of Mrs. E. E. Howell of this city. He is scarcely more than 18.

The Carnegie Library opened today at 2 o'clock. Callers will be entertained throughout the day by the officers of the library, assisted by the Carnegie Club and P. E. O. Schumacher's orchestra has been engaged to play this afternoon and this evening in the assembly room of the library.

John Young has succeeded Earl Barmann as manager of the People's Telephone at this place, Mr. Barmann having resigned.

C. Q. Smith leads the procession in having roasting ears this year—he and his family enjoying a mess last Saturday.

Homer Croy is home from the State University, having completed his second year there.

Clifford Wilfley, son of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Wilfley, arrived home the morning of July 4 from Rolla where he graduated this year from the School of Mines and Metallurgy.

J. Arthur Wray is building a fine new residence on South Main street.

George Partridge was orator on the Fourth at Worth, Mo.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Stoneburner and Charles Warehime of Ravenwood were Maryville visitors yesterday.

The "Barefoot Boy" to Be at Empire 2 Days

A picture that will appeal to any class of picture-goers is "The Barefoot Boy," and will appear at the Empire Theater Friday and Saturday nights of this week. It is a light rural-drama which has been suggested by Whittier's immortal poem of the same name. It is true to life, appealing in many situations, and the "hokum" is subservient to the story. A side-line to the main thread of the story is introduced; it is skillfully merged in the story proper. The players are all satisfactory.—

A little village lad who had been ill-treated by all the townspeople and continually blamed for the pranks of other boys leaves the town. He vows that some day he will come back and return evil for evil. Realizing at last the depth of the love and faith of a village girl, he deviates from this unworthy purpose.

The cast consists of Frankie Lee, the boy hero, John Bowers, the grown-up hero, Marjorie Daw, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshall, Otis Harlan, Harry Todd, Brinsley Shaw, George McDaniels, and Gertrude Messenger.

Good Advertising Mediums Should Be Used in Development of Communities

The following is the twenty-seventh installment of the article on "Community Advertising," written for the Democrat-Forum by D. A. Caldwell, secretary of the Maryville Chamber of Commerce.

The mediums for community advertising should be those which are employed to secure results for commercial advertising, mediums which have proved effective, repeatedly. The newspaper is a community force, when run so that it is a moral power.

The newspapers of the country are behind all community undertakings. They help raise funds. They build communities.

Newspapers are giving studied attention to the matter of community advertising, and are co-operative with Chambers of Commerce. Some are conducting farm sections at considerable expense in order to develop community spirit.

The value of a newspaper as an advertising medium varies in direct ratio with the influence it exerts over its readers. Readers confidence is the strongest thing which the newspaper offers to the community advertiser.

Heretofore, much community advertising has been of an indifferent sort. This laxity must be met with sound reasoning. A small advertisement in a technical journal is often more valuable than a large advertisement in a non-technical publication. It makes no difference how well an advertisement is written, it will be a loss, unless it reaches the right people. Part of the waste in community advertising can be attributed to our lack of definite application before placing the copy.

Advertising in a good technical publication should give information to the reader that is as helpful as the text page. Community advertising in appealing for special business must be thoroughly grounded and have practical ideas and suggestions applicable to the field where the copy is placed. The reader must be made to think, within the range of his experience, his interest must be incited, and he must respond.

PAUL SMASHES A LIE FACTORY

Comment on the Uniform International Sunday School Lesson For July 5, 1925.

Read Acts 12 and 13.

Wm. Southern, Jr.

What should be done with a man who deals in the manufacture and sale of lies?"

Our first thought in this country, where we always meet some unusual situation by calling a public gathering and passing resolutions; would be to call on congress to pass a law. Thus it happens thae we have more laws than we know what to do with and many of them amounting to nothing. There are three things which make a law valuable, public sentiment, enactment and enforcement.

Paul, soon after he started out as a missionary, faced just this situation. He believed in direct action and got immediate results. When he met the magician Elymus, who was preventing Paul's work from being effective, Paul faced his enemy and cursed him out. If you think this method of stating the case is not justified turn to the 13th chapter of the Acts and read the 10th verse. Paul opened his attack with the words, "Thou son of the Devil." Then he supplemented his verbal attack by declaring that Elymus should be blind for a time. This was pretty stiff punishment. There was no chance for bail, no opportunity for a new trial and no appeal to the supreme court. Paul put the sentence into effect at once.

There are a lot of men in this, our country of free press and free speech who are making a living and getting wealthy by manufacturing and selling lies. The lie factories are not closed by direct action and when one is closed another opens in the old plant.

There are hundreds of patent nostrums openly sold in our drug stores which claim magical properties, there are quacks in every city who profess to cure all kind of diseases and to whom victims flock in droves.

Perhaps a more dangerous set of lie factories are magazines and publications in flaming colors on the news stands carrying disease and death to the wholesome thoughts of youth and destroying the morals and clean viewpoint of girls and boys. In Washington, D. C., recently an official tried to clean these pornographic sources from the public sale. He did not succeed. The post office has tried to suppress such publications yet the lie factories continue with us.

Paul's method was rather drastic. it was the act of the new Christian church. The church people of the United States could close up every lie factory in the country in two weeks if they were aroused as was Paul.

I mean to say right here that the church people of the United States by combined action can enforce any law and stop any moral abuse over a Sunday if they want to and are willing to take action. There would be no more trouble about enforcing the eighteenth amendment if all the church people of the United States should at once take a personal, positive and active stand and demand such enforcement and themselves obey the law.

Leading up to this incident in Paul's early career is the story of a prosperous church, a liberal church, an active ministry and a charitable errand. There was famine and hardship among the Christians in Jerusalem. The new church at Antioch composed largely of Gentiles, made up a subscription and sent Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem with the money.

After their visit to the headquarters of the church these two returned to Antioch and continued preaching. The church had grown so large there were five pastors, Barnabas was the chief, Paul the evangelist and preacher, and helping them was Symeon called the Black, Lucius a Greek and Manaen a foster brother of Herod. It was a strong combination.

So successful had been this mission among the Gentiles in the wicked city of Antioch that the church decided to swarm. The official board had visions of branch churches and financed the deal. They sent out the best they had, Paul and Barnabas. Symeon, Lucis and Manaen said they could hold down the original church. Thus was started the first organized effort at Christian Missions. Antioch is noted, then, as the city where the followers of Jesus were first called Christians, where first were received into the church great numbers of Gentiles and where first were sent out Christian Missionaries. This is a record of which any church should be proud.

It was perfectly natural that the first mission should go to the Island of Cyprus. Cyprus was about as far from the mainland as is Catalina Island from California and on a clear day Catalina is visible from Santa Monica. So was Cyprus visible from the shores of the old land. Cyprus was the home land of Barnabas. Here he was living when he first heard of Jesus and here he held large possessions which he sold and devoted the proceeds to the new church. I think of Barnabas as one of the most valuable and most influential of the early preachers.

To Cyprus went Paul and Barnabas, accompanied by John Mark, nephew of Barnabas, then but a youth in trafning, a divinity student, as it were. Afterward he was to become one of the noted men of the day. He it was who gave us the second Gospel.

The three travelled on foot from town to town, preaching in the synagogues until they reached the main city on the other side of the island, Paphos. The Pro-Consul here was Sergius Paulus and his friend and advisor was the magician Elymus. Paul wanted the Pro-Consul for a convert and had him interested. Here is where Elymus, the magician came in, he opposed Paul, for he did not want to lose his best and most influential patron.

Paul won as you have already read in the story and Sergius Paulus joined the new church.

Thus Paul began his wonderful career as a Missionary and he never stopped until death claimed him. He did not stop then for his life is with us today in the form of our Christianity. Paul stood unabashed before Kings and took his message to slaves. He never turned his back on a fight and he showed us how to deal with lie factories. I hope what little of the story I have been able to compress into these few paragraphs may sound a call to Christians.

The Christian, the church member, is the man to deal with the things of this day which threatens the teachings of the church. And the first thing for the Christian to do is to get himself into action.

Misses Frances and Sylvia Crothers of Stanberry, will arrive in Maryville tonight to spend the Fourth of July with Misses LoDaiska and Helen Shelton.

Notifies Bankers of New State Law

Making of Excessive Loans is Felony For Any Bank Official After Next Thursday

State Bank Examiner, Claude L. Stout, who lives in Savannah, has mailed to the banks in Northwest Missouri a letter which contains a copy of the new law which becomes effective July 9 applying to bankers, making it a felony for a bank officer to make excessive loans. The bill passed by the 53rd general assembly and which the governor has signed, was known as Senate Bill No. 8. The bill amends article 5, section 24, revised statutes of the state of Missouri by enacting a new section providing punishment for any official in the bank, a director or employee, making excessive loans:

"Sec. 3420-s. Making excessive loans by bank officer. Any officer, director, agent, clerk or employee of any bank or trust company who willfully and knowingly makes or concurs in making any loan, either directly or indirectly to any individual, partnership or corporation or by means of letters of credit, by acceptance of drafts or by discount or purchase of notes, bills of exchange or other obligations of any person, partnership or corporation, in excess of the amounts set out in section 11740 and section 11807, of chapter 108, of the revised statutes of 1919, shall be deemed guilty of a felony and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than two years nor more than ten years or by imprisonment in the county jail for not exceeding one year or by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Mr. Stout also included in the letter:

"The records of the state finance department show that loans in excess of the limit prescribed by section 11740 and section 11807, have been violated by bank officers and directors in the past with impunity, and that such violation has resulted in many bank failures.

"Commissioner of Finance, C. E. French, has instructed me to advise all the banks and trust companies in my territory of the passage of this new section and the date on which it becomes effective, and to further advise them that it is the purpose of this department to see that this law is observed and obeyed, and that any violation thereof will be promptly reported to the proper authorities for prosecution."

COOLIDGE DRAWS LESSON FROM LIFE OF WASHINGTON

SAYS FAITH IS NECESSARY TO PERMANENT PEACE.

ARBITRATION NEEDED

President Speaks At Same Place Where Washington Took Command Of Army Just 150 Years Ago.

Cambridge, Mass., July 3.—In his address this afternoon at the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of George Washington taking command of the Continental Army, President Coolidge spoke as follows:

"After 150 anniversaries repeatedly observed, followed during the last three months by intensive celebration, in this neighborhood where it had its beginnings, the American Revolution should be fairly well understood. If it needs any justification, if it needs any praise, it is enough to say that its product is America. It ought to be unnecessary on this occasion to dwell very much on that event and its yet more remarkable results. But no great movement in the progress of mankind has ever been accomplished without the guidance of an inspired leadership. Of this accepted truth, there is no more preeminent example than that which was revealed by the war which made this country independent. Wherever men love liberty, wherever they believe in patriotism, wherever they exalt high character, by universal consent they turn to the name of George Washington. No occasion could be conceived more worthy, more truly and comprehensively American, than that which is chosen to commemorate this divinely appointed captain. The contemplation of his life and work will forever strengthen our faith in our country and in our country's God.

"Those men who have taken great parts in the world are commonly ranked by posterity according to their accomplishments while living, and the permanent worth of the monuments representing their achievements which remain after they are gone. By this standard I think we may regard George Washington as the first lay citizen of the world of all time. He was one in whom the elements of greatness were so evenly blended, so accurately proportioned, that his character has well-nigh defied analysis. Others have created wider commotion and deeper impression in the hour of their eminence. But we shall hardly find one in his own day achieved so much as Washington and left his work so firmly established that posterity, generation after generation, can only increase its tributes to his ability, his wisdom, his patriotism, and his rounded perfection in the character of a Christian citizen.

"No figure in profane history has inspired so many testimonies of admiration. The highest eloquence, the most profound sincerity, have been invoked to picture him as the very sum of public capacities and civic virtues. No pride of race or country has even attempted to set up rivals to him. Envy and malice have stood rebuked in the presence of his towering form. There is no language of literature and culture which does not boast among its adornments noble eulogies of the work and character of Washington. Although, as history reckons its periods, it is but a little time since he passed from the stage of life, he has been claimed, wherever men struggle and aspire, as the possession of all humanity, the first citizen of all the ages.

"So he must be a strangely bold and self-confident eulogist who would attempt even on such an occasion as this to add anything to the total of affection, admiration, and reverence which has been reared as the true memorial of Washington. It is impossible for us to add to or take from the estimate which has been fixed by the generations of the world.

"But if the preeminent place of Washington is thus established beyond possibility of change at our hands, it is only the more desirable that on this anniversary we should come here to do our reverence and to seek replenishment of the inspiration which is always to be drawn from consideration of his life and works. To the people of the Republic whose existence is due to his leadership, his life is the full and finished teaching of citizenship. To others, who may claim him only by virtue of the right of humanity to be heir to all the ages, his story is replete with example and admonition peculiarly applicable to the problems of the world and its peoples in these times.

"We have come here because this day a century and a half ago, and in this place, Washington formally assumed command of the armies of the Colonies. His feet trod this soil. Here was his headquarters. Here was his place of worship. Our first view therefore is of Washington the soldier. But he was indeed so much more than the soldier; his talents were so many and so perfectly proportioned, that it is impossible to study him in any one of his capacities, to the exclusion of the others. In him, we find also a marvelous instinct for statecraft, supporting and sustaining an equal genius for camp and field. We see moreover the qualities of a great man of business, which he brings to serve the vast task of organizing and equipping his armies. We find him on one day writing a noble and eloquent rebuke to a commander of the King's forces who was bent on waiving the laws of civilized warfare; and on another, addressing compelling counsels of patriotism, energy, and executive sense, to the Continental Congress and the provincial legislatures. In everything he was called to be the leader. In everything, his leadership wrought results which completely vindicated the confidence reposed in him.

"The complaint has been many times uttered that Washington was so nearly a paragon of abilities and virtues that it is impossible to see through the aura of perfections to the real, simple, human man. But there is a phase of Washington's career which, fully studied and understood, will give us the picture of him as one of the most human men in history. To inform ourselves of this human side, we need only to know of the long years of arduous preparation which preceded the historic event which took place here 150 years ago today.

"From his earliest manhood, Washington's life had been a part of great affairs. Many of those affairs were vastly greater and more significant than he himself, or indeed anybody else, could possibly have realized at the time. He had come up through a schooling of strangely mingled adversities and successes. He had devoted hard and disappointing years to activities which resulted, aside from the training which he derived, in little more than hopeless futilities. Nobody can know the real Washington, the man Washington, without studying closely his services to the Virginia Colony and the British Crown, during the years immediately preceding and covering the old French War. Here we see him as a young man, in whom the combination of rare and remarkable parts is most easily discerned. We find him, at times, hot-headed and impetuous, always intensely impatient with incompetency in places of authority.

"From the beginning we discover a special genius for commanding the respect and attention of older men. When hardly more than a boy he was chosen for a responsible and difficult mission to the French on the western frontier. This mission brought him in contact with an important French officer who reported to his government that this young man was likely to make more trouble for French interests in America than any 50 other people. That observation was more profound than its maker could have realized. Washington had been sent with a small force, as the emissary of Governor Dinwiddie, of Virginia, to notify the French that their aggressions in the upper Ohio territory were occasion of deep concern to the British colonies, and must cease. It was the wish of Washington and his superiors that the message be delivered without bringing about any clash at arms. But events decreed otherwise, and a skirmish took place in the wilderness in which a number of men were killed and wounded, among them a French officer of some rank and importance. It is deeply suggestive of the destiny which had marked Washington that this backwoods brush at arms should have occasioned the first bloodshed in that long series of wars which was to drench the Western World for near two generations, and did not end until the downfall of Napoleon.

"From the day of that clash in the western forests of Pennsylvania, precipitated by the determination of Washington to execute his mission, the Seven Years' War was a foregone conclusion. Washington was denounced in France as a murderer, a man-eating freebooter of the wilds. In England his boldness and determination won him a good deal of reputation. In the Colonies there was much difference of opinion, for the time being, whether his course was justified or had brought the country face to face with the possibility of a disastrous struggle.

"At any rate, from that day until the downfall of Napoleon at Waterloo, there was no place in either Europe or America, save for brief periods which represented little more than temporary truces. Doubtless that long and fearful series of conflicts was inevitable. Whether it was or not, the facts of history show Washington, a youth of 22, as the commander whose order proved the torch to set a world on fire. From that hour, responsible men in both Britain and France realized that there could be no lasting peace until those countries had fought the duel which should determine the supremacy of one or the other in the New World. There was not room for both.

"So came the Seven Years' War and the establishment of British domination in North America. A little later came the American Revolution, the French Revolution, and the Napoleonic wars. One can but wonder what might have been the reflections of Washington, if he could have imagined on that July morning of 1754, when he resolved that he must fight, if he could have known the train of events that would follow upon his determination. But such conjecture is of little value. To us there is more of immediate interest in the curious coincidence that the skirmish for possession of Fort Necessity took place on July 3, 1754, exactly 21 years before the day when Washington in this place assumed command of the Continental Army.

"And those 21 years, as Washington lived them, constituted a fitting probation for the career that awaited him. The echoes of the little battle of Fort Necessity reverberated throughout the American Colonies and the European courts as if it had been an engagement of Titans. Its political effects were tremendous. It made Washington a marked man throughout the Colonies and gave him a real European reputation.

"His part in the Braddock expedition, though vastly better known, probably had less effect in forming his character or directing his career than this expedition to Fort Necessity. Nevertheless, his reputation was further increased by his conduct in the Braddock campaign. But that heroic episode was followed by a long and disappointing experience as head of the Virginia forces defending the western frontier. He saw little of satisfying service during this period. But he learned the supreme importance of organization and preparation in connection with military operations. In the end it was his privilege to lead his Virginians to the occupation of Fort Pitt, when it was finally surrendered by the French. But the real campaign for control of the Ohio Valley was made from the north by General Wolfe on the Plains of Abraham rather than from Virginia, and Washington found his part in it disappointingly small.

"Not only the Braddock campaign of 1755, but his earlier operations, both diplomatic and military, on the upper Ohio, marked him as a man of caution, sagacity and wisdom in planning and conducting military operations. At the same time, they showed him as the intrepid and fearless fighting soldier in the hours of action.

"One thing that Washington learned during the French War must have contributed greatly to form his opinions about relations between Britain and the Colonies. He was brought to realize that the form of colonial government, with which bitter experience made him so familiar, could not long satisfy the people of the larger, wealthier, and fast-growing Colonies. With Washington, the idea of substantial freedom long preceded that of independence. Like most of the colonial youth, he hoped that a more enlightened policy in London and a more sympathetic execution of it by the royal governors might compose the growing differences. During the troublous epoch between the French War and the Revolution he thought deeply of these matters, and his correspondence gives evidence of the growing impression that a contest might come. He followed the development of events in Massachusetts with a close and understanding concern. His writings and occasional public pronouncements during this period show him acutely anxious that the Colonies should present a united front when the test came. One in his position of leadership, authority, and independent fortune, living as a Virginia gentleman, might easily enough have felt that the troubles of the Massachusetts Bay Colony had small concern for him. High Churchman, conformist in most things, enjoying excellent repute in England and with English officials in America, his influence might logically enough have been thrown to the royalists. Yet, as early as the spring of 1769, he wrote declaring, "Our lordly masters in Great Britain will be satisfied with nothing less than the deprivation of American freedom * * *." And, inquiring what could be done to avert such a calamity, he added, "That no man should scruple or hesitate a moment to use arms in defense of so valuable a blessing is clearly my opinion. Yet, arms, I would beg to add, should be the last resource." A little later, in that same year, Washington, at a public meeting, offered a nonimportation resolution and secured its adoption.

"In short, it is plain that he was anxious to keep the sentiment of the southern Colonies fully in step and sympathy with the attitude of the New England patriots who at the moment were bearing the brunt of the struggle for colonial rights. Seemingly, the Boston port bill convinced him that the Colonies must prepare for the harshest eventualities. At a meeting of the citizens of his county he helped draft a petition and remonstrance to the King, which concluded with the ominous words, "From our sovereign there can be but one appeal." Such a declaration, coming from one whose repute was high in all the Colonies, and who was beginning to speak with the voice of something like authority for the southern communities, could not fail to strengthen the arm and purpose of the New Englanders.

"The selection of Washington to command the Continental Armies has, I think, been too much attributed to his high military repute and too little to the fact that he had long taken the view of a true statesman regarding the impending crisis. The fact is that he had all along seen the struggle as a continental and national one. He realized that Massachusetts could not win alone, or could New England. In helping to set up the committee of correspondence, in molding the sentiment of Virginia, in his service as member of the Continental Congress, the ideal of a firm and whole-hearted union of all the Colonies was plainly fundamental. Repeatedly, in his writings, even long before the struggle had seriously suggested the possibility of war, he used the phrase, "Our Country," giving it an application vastly broader than the domain or concerns of any single colony. He was among the first to see the vision of an American Nation. No other man so early grasped certain physical and geographic arguments which urged nationality as inevitable.

"In this, his engineering training, together with his intimate knowledge of the topography of the Ohio and Potomac Valleys, had an important part. As a young surveyor he realized the importance of that break through the Allegheny system which these two valleys mark. Many years later he pointed out its strategic importance in connection with the defense and unity of the Colonies fronting the Atlantic. Before the Ohio was much more than a myth to most people, even in Virginia, Washington saw that the Ohio basin must be controlled by the Colonies if they were to be secure.

"Thus it was that a complete and clear vision of all the arguments for national unity was due to the many-sidedness of the Washington mind. He saw it as a politician, as statesman, as military man, as engineer. Without such a grasp of all the elements, he could not have taken the statesmanly and essentially national view of the problem before hostilities began. Nor could he have dealt effectively with its military aspects during the war. He possessed one of those rarely endowed minds which not only recognize all the factors, but assign to each its proper weight.

He was in truth a consummate politician. When he went to the sittings of the Continental Congress, wearing his Virginia uniform of buff and blue, some were inclined to ridicule the display of military predilection. They accused him of swashbuckling, and pointed to his uniform as equivalent to announcement of his candidacy for Commander in Chief. In the first, they were utterly wrong; in the second, quite probably right. That uniform, when he presided over the committees on military preparation, could hardly have been construed as meaning anything other than that its wearer realized what was ahead and was willing to force some part of that realization on others.

"I suppose if we were to pick any two men out of that gathering, to be set down as something other than politicians, Washington and sturdy old John Adams would be well toward the top in the polling. Though they approached the matter from utterly different angles, they were both led by the sagacity of great politicians to the same conclusion. To both, the crisis was essentially national. A nation must be created to deal with it. The army before Boston must be taken over by the Congress as a national army. There must be a Commander in Chief, supreme in the military field. All this we look back upon as illumined statesmanship. But statesmanship is nothing more than good, sound politics, tested and proved. That is what it was when John Adams conceived the great strategy of calling a man of the South to the chief command. A more provincial man might have dreamed of Massachusetts, aided by the other colonies, taking and holding the lead and garnering the lion's share of glory. But Adams was planning in terms of a nation, not of provinces; and Washington had for years been writing of "Our Country." So Washington put on his uniform in testimony of his readiness for whatever might happen, and Adams, after some period of misgiving, set about convincing the delegates from New England and the middle colonies that there must be a nation, and a national army, with a Commander in Chief, and that must be Washington.

"It was a stroke of political genius that Adams, soul of Puritanic idealism, should have moved the adoption of the army by Congress and the selection of Washington as Commander in Chief. The selection was made without a dissenting vote, though it is not true to say that Washington was unanimously preferred. Already there were clashing ambitions and divergent community interests. But Adams saw, and made others see, the peculiar reasons that urged Washington. The middle Colonies, dominated by their landed aristocracies, had much in common with the social and economic system of the South. To them Washington meant the enlistment of property, substance, and eminent respectability. In presenting his name to the Congress Adams described him in terms which seem prophetic, and which we can hardly improve: "A gentleman, whose skill and experience as an officer, whose independent fortune, great talents, and excellent universal character would command the approbation of all America and unite the cordial exertions of all the Colonies better than any other person in the Union."

"Let it ever be set down to the glory of Massachusetts that John Adams made George Washington Commander in Chief of the Continental Armies and John Marshall Chief Justice of the United States. Destiny could have done no more.

"Immediately after his selection, Washington set out from Philadelphia for Boston. On the way he received first tidings of the Battle of Bunker Hill, which had been fought two days after he was named for commander. He inquired eagerly about the behavior of the continental troops, and when he learned how splendidly they had fought against the British regulars he quietly declared that the liberties of the country were safe. In that anxious hour the battle of 20 years earlier in the Pennsylvania woods, wherein his Virginia militia had saved Braddock's regulars from destruction, no doubt was near the top of his mind. To be assured that the raw levies of New England were capable of behaving just as well in 1775 as his Virginians had done in 1755 must have been intensely reassuring.

"Knowing the story of the Revolution as we do, we can not doubt that the historic event which took place here 150 years ago today marked one of its crises. Even with Washington, the struggle was well-nigh lost at several periods. Of course, the ultimate separation of the Colonies from the mother country was inevitable. Had the Revolution of 1775 failed, as it must have failed without Washington, there would have been harsh and vindictive reprisals. Nobody can read the arrogant pronouncements of Lord North's government or the still more arrogant letters of General Gage to Washington and avoid conviction that the British Government and its American military representatives would have vied with each other in efforts to estrange the Colonies. Such a policy would have established traditions of animosity that would have kept the struggle alive even after a nominal peace. In the end separation would have come. But it might have been delayed through many recurrences of turbulence and struggle. It was vastly to the good of both the mother country and the Colonies that, the conflict being once begun, it was brought to a decisive conclusion.

"There is another reason why the final victory of the Colonies was important to the world. It was just as necessary for the maintenance of the British Empire as for the proper development of the American community. I believe this view is now generally accepted by British students as well as Americans. We may be sure that it was in the mind of the great Chatham, who had laid the foundations of the British Empire in the Seven Years' War. If there was a man in all that realm who might as well have been given attention when the American crisis was developing, that man was Chatham. He had found Britain weak and had built it into strength. He had well-nigh made the whole North American Continent British. He had re-established the empire and extended it in many directions. Yet Chatham knew that Lord North's policies would surely cost the loss of the American dominion. Emerging from a long political retirement, defying the doctors he hated and the King he had served, the grand old man hurried down to the House of Lords to pronounce his allegiance to the cause of the Colonies. "When your lordships," said he, "look at the papers transmitted to us from America; when you consider their decency, their firmness, their wisdom, you can not but respect their cause and wish to make it your own." That decency, firmness, and wisdom were in no small part George Washington.

"Chatham knew what it had been to build an empire; he would not see it thrown away without having his protest heard. He spoke the voice of liberalism in England; but the King and his ministers had no ear for such counsels. They had fixed their course and could not be swerved."

"Washington's assumption of the command gave the colonial cause an effective national character. Had he not possessed the genius and the power to impress others with that conception, it is hardly conceivable that disaster could long have been postponed. He found himself in command of an unorganized, undisciplined, unprovisioned, and unmunitioned body of some 14,000 militia, opposing an army of 11,000 regulars shut up in Boston and supported by a naval power that completely commanded the seas. Washington was called first to make an army, then to drive his enemy out of Boston, and then to meet attack at whatever point along the coast the enemy might choose. Where many others, quite as sincere in their patriotism, fondly imagined that the evacuation of Boston would move the London government to make peace, he was convinced that it would be little more than the beginning. For the long struggle he foresaw, he had to prepare, not only by creating an army but by convincing the civil authority and the people that he must have the utmost measure of their support and co-operation. So we find him, immediately upon assuming his command, dividing his time between military tasks and the writing of endless letters to the leaders of the Congress, to the provincial assemblies, to men of importance everywhere, designed to impress them with the enormity of the coming struggle.

"This is not the time or place for a review of Washington's military career. Yet there are phases of that career which I am never able to pass over without a word of wonder and admiration because of some of the exploits which it includes.

"It is recorded that a few evenings after the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown a banquet was given by Washington and his staff to the British commander and his staff. One likes to contemplate the sportsmanship of that function. Amiabilities and good wishes were duly exchanged, and finally Lord Cornwallis rose to present his compliments to Washington. There had been much talk of past campaigning experiences, and Cornwallis, turning to Washington, expressed the judgment that when history's verdict was made up "the brightest garlands for your excellency will begathered, not from the shores of the Chesapeake, but from the banks of the Delaware." We may fairly assume that Cornwallis, in the fullness of a very personal experience, was qualified to judge. Washington had outgeneraled and defeated him both on the banks of the Delaware and the shores of the Chesapeake. In giving the laurels to the Trenton-Princeton campaign, he expressed not only his own judgment, but the estimate which was afterwards pronounced by Frederick the Great, who declared that the Trenton-Princeton campaign was the most brilliant military performance of the century. For myself, without pretense of military wisdom, the lightning-like stroke of Trenton and Princeton in its supreme audacity and ideal execution has always seemed the most perfectly timed combination of military genius and political wisdom, that we find in the records of warfare.

"On the other hand, much can be urged to support the claim that Yorktown was the most brilliant campaign of Washington. With an army on the point of disintegration, he was almost utterly unable to get supplies and transport. Yet, he managed to withdraw his forces from before New York and get them well on the way to Virginia before his enemy seriously suspected his design. It was a miracle of military skill, diplomacy, and determination, to effect on the Virginia Peninsula that consolidation of forces from south and north, along with the French army and fleet, at precisely the right moment. The essence of strategy is to divide the forces of the enemy and defeat them in detail; and there are few campaigns which show a commander accomplishing this through operations covering so extended a territory and involving so many difficulties.

"In the Yorktown campaign we see all the varied elements of Washington's genius at work. He had to deal at once with an inert Congress that was threatening at this critical moment actually to reduce the Army. He had to find supplies and money or get along without them. In part he did one, in part the other. He had to effect a junction of widely separated forces and to maintain secrecy to the last moment. Everything must be done within a period of time so short that it might well have made success appear utterly impossible, because he could not count on the co-operation of the French for a longer period. All these things he accomplished. Accomplishing them, he won the war, as in the campaign of Trenton and Princeton he had saved the Revolution. No man could have rendered his service to the Revolution who was not both a soldier and statesman. He understood, and he never underestimated, the political bearings of every move.

"When he retired to Mount Vernon, Washington entered upon a new phase of his career. He had won the war but he was a man of peace. His experience as commander in chief had completely convinced him that the form of government under the confederation could not possibly serve the necessities of the country. It is not possible here to outline the discouragements which threatened the country with all manner of disasters. Washington, as the most influential citizen, was the inevitable leader in preparing for the Constitutional Convention of 1787 and the establishment of a real nation. That task he took up early, and to it he devoted an energy and a wisdom that were alike amazing. It was quite natural that he should be chosen to preside over the Constitutional Convention. When its work was done, his influence was one of the chief forces to bring about ratification. After that, there was none to question that he must be the first President under the new regime.

"Perhaps no character in history has been subjected to more close study or sympathetic analysis than that of Washington. The volume of his writings which have been left to us is enormous. Moreover, from earliest manhood his life was lived almost continuously under intense public observation. It is therefore remarkable that biographers and eulogists should be so generally accused of failing to give us a satisfying picture of him. The fault, however, is not his, but theirs. The explanation is that no biographer has possessed, and probably none ever will possess, the full rounded measure of qualification to appreciate, to understand, to apportion, and to weigh all the elements that made this man. Unfortunately, a vast myth was early built around Washington, difficult to avoid, and not even yet entirely dissipated. Among his biographers and eulogists, some have seen him first and most admiringly the great soldier. Some have been most engaged with him as the statesman-politician, dealing with great affairs from day to day as circumstances demanded. Others have devoted themselves particularly to portraying him as the constructive student of government, and builder of institutions. Still others have found their first inspiration in his work as a wise, firm, and discriminating administrator.

"Volumes have been written, and they are exceedingly interesting volumes, on Washington as a pioneer of modern scientific agriculture. It is interesting to recall that in their tastes for agriculture Washington and his great antagonist, King George III, stood on a common ground. Whoever cares to familiarize himself with this particular detail in the careers of Washington and the King will find that these two might in other circumstances have been the best of friends. For both were devoted admirers and supporters of Arthur Young, the famous English traveler and agricultural authority. In the last year or two before the beginning of the French Revolution, Young traveled extensively throughout France. He kept a journal of his observations and experiences that has since been invaluable to whoever wished to know conditions in the France of that time. Besides all this Arthur Young was almost the founder of the modern science and technique of advanced agriculture. He wrote and published voluminously on such subjects as rotation of crops, scientific fertilization, farm drainage, the breeding of livestock, the growing of plants, and many other subjects which are now commonplaces. King George became interested in his work and turned over to him some farms of the royal domain to be conducted as the earliest agricultural experiment stations.

"Young published an agricultural journal devoted to his theories and experiments, and to it Washington became a subscriber. This led him into a correspondence with Young, which seems to have been quite extended. Convinced that the Young program represented much of value to American Agriculture, Washington offered to set aside one of his farms, to be managed by English experts, if Young would enlist them. Apparently nothing finally came of this proposal, but the fact that it was made, and seriously considered, shows how near Washington and King George came to an intimate association for the betterment of agriculture. Indeed, inside of two years after the end of the Revolution, Washington appealed to Young to buy and ship to him an invoice of agricultural implements and seeds with which Washington desired to experiment. On investigation, Young discovered that British law forbade these exports. So he went to the Minister for Home Affairs, Lord Grenville, and pleaded for permission to send them. It was immediately granted, and by the courtesy of the British Government the entire order was filled. The incident is an interesting indication of the liberal disposition manifested, so soon after the war, by leading men of both countries.

"It is a pleasant thing to be privileged to recall on an occasion like this such a bit of evidence touching the underlying community of interest between the old Kingdom and the new Republic in matters of common con-

Chicago Closing Grain Review.

Chicago, July 3.—Grains lost fractionally in today's session on the Chicago Board of Trade. Wheat was active. It started higher, slumped in mid-day and in final trading staged a good come-back to within a fraction of the opening.

High temperatures in the Southwest boosted corn early. Later this grain slipped off when wheat turned weak and checked up losses for the day.

Oats ruled strong but they too lost in late trading with other grains.

Good buying of lard by local interests on high hogs boosted provisions.

cern and human advancement. Washington was the last person to harbor resentments; and in this and other instances he more than once found his former enemies ready to meet him half way. As we look back now on a century and more of uninterrupted peace between the two nations, we can not but feel that such peace and the long period of international cooperation which it has made possible have been in no small part a testimony to the generous willingness of all men everywhere to recognize as the first citizen of the world him who has been so long acclaimed as the first American.

"It had been my expectation to confine my address to General Washington and leave the stately and solemn grandeur of this great figure as the sole subject for the thought of those who might hear me. I shall not enter into the vain speculation of what he might do if he were living today. Yet his farewell address shows conclusively that he hoped to be able to lay down certain principles of conduct for his fellow countrymen which would be of advantage to them so long as the Nation into which he had wrought his life might endure. No doubt he knew the whole world would hear him. He had seen the life of the soldier in time of war and after that of the statesman in time of peace. He believed mightily in his fellow men. The vigor with which he insisted on the prosecution of war was no less than the vigor with which he insisted on the observance of peace. He cherished no resentments, he harbored no hatreds, he forgave his enemies. He felt the same obligation to execute the terms of a treaty made for the benefit of a former foe that he felt to require the observance of those made for the benefit of his own country. He realized that peace could be the result only of mutual forbearanc and mutual good faith.

"He harmonized the divergent and conflicting interests of different colonial governments by conferences and agreement. He demonstrated by his arguments, and our country has demonstrated by experience, that more progress can be made by co-operation than by conflict. To agree quickly with your adversary always pays.

"The world has not outgrown, it can never outgrow, the absolute necessity for conformity to these eternal principles. I want to see America assume a leadership among the nations in the reliance upon the good faith of mankind. I do not see how civilization can expect permanent progress on any other theory. If what is saved in the productive peace of today is to be lost in the destructive war of tomorrow, the people of this earth can look forward to nothing but everlasting servitude. There is no justification for hope. This was not the conception which Washington had of life.

"If the people of the Old World are mutually distrustful of each other let them enter into mutual covenants for their mutual security, and when such covenants have been made let them be solemnly observed no matter what the sacrifice. They have settled the far more difficult problems of reparations, they are in process of funding their debts to us, why can they not agree on permanent terms of peace and fully reestablish international faith and credit? If there be differences which can not be adjusted at the moment, if there be conditions which can not be forseen, let them be resolved in the future by methods of arbitration and by the forms of judicial determination.

"While our own country should refrain from making political commitments where it does not have political interests, such covenants would always have the moral support of our Government and could not fail to have the commendation of the public opinion of the world. Such a course would be sure to endow the participating nations with an abundant material and spiritual reward. On what other basis can there be any encouragement for a disposition to attempt to finance a revival of Europe? The world has tried war with force and has utterly failed. The only hope of success lies in peace with justice.

It is impossible to get anywhere if you are a crab. Nobody loves you. To be successful you must have a kindly, lovable disposition. You can not have this with an unhealthy liver and stomach. They don't go together. Mayr's Wonderful Remedy has given complete and permanent results in thousands of such cases. Our advice to everyone troubled in this way, especially when accompanied with bloating in the stomach, is to try this remedy. RESOLUTION NO. A-24.

A Resolution for Grading, Paving, Curbing and otherwise improving Lincoln Street, from the West Line of Main Street West to the Center Line of Buchanan Street, in the City of Maryville, Missouri.

Be it Resolved by the Council of the City of Maryville, Missouri, as follows, to-wit:

SECTION 1. That it is hereby declared necessary to bring to the established grade, and pave, curb and otherwise improve to a total width of 23 feet, 11 inches, from face of curb to face of curb, the roadway of Lincoln Street, in the City of Maryville, Missouri, from the west line of Main Street west to the center line of Buchanan Street.

SECTION 2. The said grading shall consist of bringing the roadway of said Street to the established grade, as provided by Ordinance No. 1032 of the City of Maryville, Missouri, by cuts and fills and by excavation sufficient to provide for the aforesaid paving as shown by profiles of said street, now on file in the office of the City Clerk.

Said paving shall consist of 7 inch reinforced concrete paving laid on a well rolled sub-grade.

The curb and gutter shall consist of an integral curb, constructed of concrete. The curb to be 5 inches wide at top and 6 inches at bottom, and an average depth of 13 inches.

All the aforesaid improvements shall be constructed in strict accordance with the plans and profiles therefor now on file in the office of the City Clerk.

SECTION 3. The cost of said work, to wit: grading, paving, curbing and otherwise improving, including the cost of bringing said street to the established grade, shall be levied as a special assessment upon all lots and pieces of ground upon either side of said street abutting thereon, as provided by law, and special tax bills bearing interest at the rate of 8 percent per annum after thirty days from the date of issue evidencing such assessment shall be issued to the contractor for payment of said work.

SECTION 4. The Council of the City of Maryville, Missouri, further finds that the distance covered by this pavement is less than twelve hundred feet, and that it connects with pavements at each end. All curb and gutter now constructed on said streets on established grades shall be deducted from this work.

Any person desiring to do so may appear before the City Council of Maryville, on the 10th day of July, 1925, at 7:30 p. m., at City Hall and be heard upon the question of the necesity of the work sought to be done under this resolution.

Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be published seven consecutive insertions in the Democrat-Forum and Maryville Tribune, a daily newspaper published in said city.

Passed and approved this 20th day of June, 1925.

MEYERS NAMES LINE-UPS FOR COMING GAMES.

E. DIXON OR H. BUHLER

Will Start on Mound For M. M. B. C. Against Whitesville in Fourth of July Fray.

"How will they start tomorrow?"

Frank Meyers, field captain and manager of the Maryville Merchants' said he could answer this all except the battery but he named four men as possible starters for the game with Whitesville on the Fourth.

Eugene Dixon or Henry Buhler for hurlers and Howell England or Tommy Tobin for catchers, were mentioned by Captain Meyers. These four men will comprise the battery for the two-game series that the. M M. B. C. has scheduled for Saturday and Sunday, as Shenandoah, Ia., will be represented here in a return game Sunday by the Mount Arbor ball players.

For the rest of the line-up the following are a certainty:

Tilson, first base; Roy Mayes, second base; Paul Buhler, short stop; Frank Meyers, third base; and Waller Still and French for outfield positions, with Bud Bluel as utility man.

The games will commence at 3 o'clock each afternoon and Claud Wilson is expected to call the balls and strikes and officiate all decisions at the rubber. They will be played at the M. M. B. C. Club park at the old fairgrounds immediately east of the city on First street.

Quarrelsome Black Cat Foursome Puts Out Defiant Noise

Accepts Challenge of the Four Leaf Clover Foursome, Warning Them of Impending Hard Luck.

"When the Black Cat 4 cross their path the Four Leaf Clovers are going to meet up with a lot of tough luck," said a member of another foursome organized at the Maryville Country Club.

In other words this was throwing an insinuating challenge to the Four Leaf Clover Foursome that gave out such a sweeping blat yesterday in the Democrat-Forum and Tribune by the "Black Cat Quarrelsone."

In its defiant challenge the Black Cat Quarrelson openly avowed the members of this lusty gang would "take a couple pedals off the Four Leafers" and the spokesman for the stickers said the Quarrelsome would play at any convenient time and play any way.

To those who are wondering the personnel of the Quarrelsome Foursome cast your optics below:

M. S. ("Bud") Hamilton, Coach H Frank Lawrence, F C. Miller and Luther A. Richman.

N. B.—The sport editor would like to inform the public when these matches are to be played and he wants the score of each player in these coming conflicts.

Flag Tournament Planned Besides Various Golf Stunt Contests at 1:30 o'Clock at Tee One

Fourth of July will be a busy day for the golf players of the Maryville Country Club. There will be various sorts of entertainment throughout the entire day.

Various kinds of golf stunts are arranged for everyone. Prizes will be awarded in each contest. All are invited to compete—there will be no entry fee.

A flag tournament will be conducted during the entire day with the exception of the hour or two commencing at 1:30 o'clock when contests are arranged. Each golfer is allowed forty-five strokes. The player getting around the farthest will be the winner.

Teams and schedules of games for the baseball and basketball tournaments will be announced within the next few days, according to Coach Paul Jones.

In the tennis doubles tourney several first class players are coupled up and competition will be keen. In the horseshoe matches many of the "experts" who performed in this sport at the College last year are again entered and with the experience of last summer so their advantage will sling a mean pair of barnyard oxfords.

Long Drivers are Chosen for Local Golf Six Sunday

Long drivers for a long course. That was C. G. ("Chick") Vogt's idea of a team from the Country Club to play in the Iowa-Missouri Golf Association tourney at Shenandoah, Ia, Sunday

At this time teams from Clarinda, Red Oak, Maryville and Shenandoah will compete in what is promised to be the hottest match of the I.-M. series of golf matches.

The Shenandoah course is perhaps the longest one in the Association, being more than 3,000 yeards for the nine holes, and the holes are all about the same length, with the exception of one.

C. G. Vogt, who was designated as captain for the Maryville team Sunday, will be unable to accompany the players to Shenandoah, but today picked the personnel. He has named Byron Costello acting captain and the following members:

Dr. H. S. Dowell, Forrest Gillam, H. Frank Lawrence, M. S. Hamilton and Ed Dale.

Floyd Cook Goes to Top in College Tennis Tourney

Floyd Cook displaced Jack Sheley this week from the top-notch position in the challenge tennis tournament in progress at the State Teachers College, winning from the latter in straight sets. Several other changes in the standings of the men in the play have taken place during the first week of playing. Each man always challenges the man above his name on the list and must win the match in order to climb a notch toward the top in the standings.

Denton Peoples has worked his way up to third place in the rankings and several other good players are gradually working toward the top. Within a week or two all of them will be fighting among themselves for t he top rank. By this method of conducting the tournament each man plays against an oppoinent who is very nearly on a par with himself. The man who stands at the top at the end of July will be declared the winner of the tournament.

The following is the standing of the men up to today:

1. Floyd Cook, 2. Jack Sheley, 3. Denton Peoples, 4. Pierpoint, 5. Lloyd Glenn, 6. Cloys Appleby, 7. Donald Dowell, 8. Vernon Goslee, 9. Carl Ferguson, 10. Billy Lamkin, 11. Joe Gex, 12. Everette Reynolds, 13. Joe Kagay, 14. Wayne Venill, 15. James Calkins, 16. Reed Holt.

17. O. Adams, 18. O. A. Sipes, 19. Homer Richmond, 20. Lester Carson, 21. Frank Gusewelle, 22. Fred Smith, 23. Burley Lucas, 24. Duane Whitford, 25. Harold O'Banion, 26. Leslie Holcomb, 27. J. J. Rode, 28. Earl Peoples, 29. Eldon Steiger, 30. Sherlock.
